CAREER POSITIONING

Strategically Mapping Your Early Career Development

This panel will focus on nuts-and-bolts career planning for early careerists.

In today's changing healthcare environment, early careerists need skills and strategies to position themselves for the future. You have the freedom to create the career paths that link your talents and interests with the right job. No job comes with a life time guarantee and flexibility is important. To achieve upward mobility in your career, you must constantly reinvent your brand. Learn from your peers the necessary steps to take your career path to the next level.

REBUILDING TRUST

Following Hospital Clinical & Managerial Errors

From headlines to HealthGrades, healthcare organizations are becoming more transparent due to increased monitoring by various public and private entities. From hospital executives that have taken on the task of rebuilding their image following an unexpected error in their organization, we can gain a better understanding of how to create increased community trust and market share. This may include increased community relations initiatives, internal public relations campaigns, such as responses to patients and families' questions, press releases, future

TALENT MANAGEMENT

For Bench Strength Development

Talent management and succession planning are important to the successful operation of every organization. Together, they constitute a systematic process for preparing people to meet an organization's needs for talent over time. They are designed to ensure the continued effective performance of an organization by developing employees at all levels, while paying particular attention to the identification and training of high potential candidates for managerial or leadership positions.

Talent management and succession planning enable an organization to meet its needs for leadership by assessing the competencies required for key positions, nurturing and developing the talents needed to fill those positions, and
